EARLY CHRISTIAN GRAVE PAINTINGS IN NIŠ BETWEEN EAST AND WEST

On account of time constraints we can offer here only select examples, and unfortunately cannot consider greater detail of the monuments in their entirety.

Let us begin with the crypt with the image of an anchor (Fig. 1).<sup>1</sup> On the crypt's ceiling is a sphere (diameter of 10.5 cm) encircling a laurel wreath and a Christogram with Alpha and Omega (Fig. 2). Similar décor is in a grave in Viminacium/Kostolac (Fig. 3),<sup>2</sup> in Grave No. 4 of the necropolis at Sv. Sofija in Serdica/Sofija,<sup>3</sup> several in Thessaloniki (in Grave 89 of the east necropolis as well as in Graves 46, 53 and 57 in the west necropolis),<sup>4</sup> and the easternmost area of the southeastern necropolis of Chersonesos at Sevastopol on the Crimean peninsula (Fig. 4).<sup>5</sup> Similarly, they are found in great numbers in the West on grave panels (Fig. 5) as well as on sarcophagi, such as the sarcophagus of Archbishop Theodorus in S.Apollinare in Classe in Ravenna (Fig. 6), the Prince or Sarigüzel sarcophagus in Istanbul<sup>6</sup> and especially on the Passion sarcophagi (Fig. 7).<sup>7</sup> It is also used in the northern regions of the Roman Empire, as evidenced by the baptistery of Lullingstone (Fig. 8).<sup>8</sup> Such décor is also in the burial chamber in Sopianae/Pécs, which will be addressed later – though, like on the Sarigüzel sarcophagus, the apocalyptic letters Alpha and Omega are missing.

This image expresses the hope in the eternal life through Christ.

Returning to the grave in Niš, we see in the lunette on the west wall another anchor cross in the midst of roses. According to the instructions of Clement of Alexandria,<sup>9</sup> this is frequently found over the signet images on gems and rings, such as the example made out of gold from a grave in Durostorum/Silistra (Fig. 9).<sup>10</sup> It's likewise found on grave panels in the Roman cemeteries, as in the catacombs of Priscilla (Fig. 10).

The hope of the deceased through the resurrected Christ is expressed here as well.

The paintings of the tomb portraying Peter and Paul in the necropolis of Jagodin Mala are unfortunately very poorly preserved today. Color replicas are located in the national museum of Niš.<sup>11</sup>

They depicted four unidentified figures: one on either side of the entrance, located at the eastern wall of the burial chamber (Fig. 11), and one on either side of the niche on the western wall (Fig. 12). The figures wear long white tunics with red clavi and pallia (Figs. 13 – 14). A Christogram within a laurel wreath, similar to the one on the ceiling in the previously-discussed grave with the anchor, decorates the wall above the entrance (Fig. 15); another is located over the niche. A garden, bordered by a fence of herms and continuing upwards onto the vault (Fig 16), decorates the longitudinal walls.<sup>12</sup> It was painted with birds and grapevines bearing grape clusters (as in Grave No. 4 of the necropolis of Serdica around Sv. Sofija in Sofija,<sup>13</sup> or on the vault mosaic of the mausoleum of the Julians in the necropolis under St. Peter's in Rome<sup>14</sup>). The archaeologist

L. Mirković<sup>15</sup> and F. Gerke<sup>16</sup> identified this as paradise. The latter offers a number of comparative examples, such as those from Roman catacombs like San Sebastiano (Fig. 17). According to F.W. Deichmann<sup>17</sup> the herm fence represents the actual garden design,<sup>18</sup> the kepotaphium<sup>19</sup>. The two figures at the entrance were identified as Peter and Paul (the former with a rotulus in his left hand). The two other figures on the west side remain unknown. Noteworthy are first of all the palm branches, which already led M. Rakocija<sup>20</sup> to think of the saints. Dj. Bošković<sup>21</sup> interpreted the figures as the deceased. I. Nikolajević also followed this interpretation.<sup>22</sup> The deceased, however, are most commonly portrayed in bust portraits, in images of their occupation, frequently as orans figures, as well as in meal or scenic settings.<sup>23</sup> Furthermore, four comparable lunettes (Fig. 18) in the so-called mausoleum of Galla Placidia in Ravenna more closely resemble the apostles. Roses bloom above the niche (Fig. 19). The figure standing to the left points with both hands to the Christogram. An almost identical composition is in Sopianae/Pécs (Fig. 20).<sup>24</sup> There Peter also stands to the right of the Christogram (Figs. 21 – 22) and Paul to the left. Like the figures in Niš, here too both wear white tunics with red clavi and pallia as well as rotuli (no longer visible today). Painted on the ceiling are four (!) bust figures, which K. Hudak wishes to identify as the IV coronati.<sup>25</sup> Yet it is noteworthy that they worked in the Pannonian stone quarries (perhaps even in those of today's Fruška Gora).<sup>26</sup> This would imply that these saints also have a great relevance for Niš, since as early as the fourth century the city is named by Victricius of Rotomagus / Rouen<sup>27</sup> as a martyr city alongside Constantinople, Antioch, Thessaloniki and Rome; a martyr church<sup>28</sup> whose saints are unknown to us is also here. K. Hudak further sees Peter and Paul<sup>29</sup> as defenders of the true faith, namely orthodoxy, against Arianism. Even this had found its way to Niš.<sup>30</sup> In both cases (Sopianae and Naissus) its identification as a martyr crypt is suggestive especially because both have a niche at the terminating wall whose determination is not clear to this day, but would be consistent with a martyr cult on account of the storage of relics. In such cases a relic of original bones is not an absolute necessity, for it could also be a touchable relic in the form of cloths or similar items. Comparable situations are, for example, in Rome at the tomb of the Apostle Peter,<sup>31</sup> in a martyr crypt of the Pontian catacombs (Fig. 23),<sup>32</sup> and in the so-called Confession under SS. Giovanni e Paolo (Fig. 24)<sup>33</sup> as well as in the so-called mausoleum of Galla Placidia in Ravenna which was perhaps a memorial,<sup>34</sup> though in this example we are dealing with windows.

In closing it must be reminded that all comparative examples offered here for the grave painting in Niš have clearly demonstrated that there are, in reality, no iconographical differences between East and West in early Christian art<sup>35</sup>.

 РАНОХРИШЋАНСКО ГРОБНО СЛИКАРСТВО У НИШУ
 ИЗМЕЂУ ИСТОКА И ЗАПАДА

Кроз два одабрана примера, гробнице са сидром и једне из некрополе у Јагодин мали са Петром и Павлом овај рад укратко (једноставно из разлога временског ограничења) демонстрира да не постоје важеће иконографске разлике између Истока и Запада у ранохришћанском гробном сликарству.
